

PRIVACY PROTECTION

WITH THE SILK LIFE PLAN

- › Under general inheritance law, when someone dies their estate will pass on to their family. If anyone wishes to leave assets to someone outside of their family they will need to write a Will, and the arrangement will be disclosed to their family.
- › With the Silk Life Plan, a policy owner can name any person as the beneficiary, even if, in normal circumstances, that person might not be eligible to receive benefit from the estate under inheritance laws.
- › Personal data held by Utmost International about individuals, including data held in connection with the Silk Life Plan is protected by the Isle of Man Law and Regulations which ensure that financial services companies may only share data with third parties under certain circumstances, such as sharing with trusted third party supplier or when required by law, court order or regulation.
- › This means the identity of any beneficiary is kept strictly confidential. This enables the policy owner to provide financial security to their chosen beneficiaries without disclosing to others who might have conflicting interests and might disrupt the arrangement.

Identity of the beneficiary under a Silk Life Plan is kept strictly confidential and will not be disclosed to others who might have conflicting interests.

*The death benefit will be paid as a cash amount, by transfer of assets or a combination of both.

The value of investments can fall as well as rise and you may not get back what you put in.
